Reflection

Avery & Claire

We worked together the entire time on our project, so we mostly used one document and both collaborated on writing the code for that. We didn't create branches or pull requests in GitHub because we created a lot of issues for ourselves trying to do that in the GitHub certification. We liked our method of working together because we talked through everything we did and it was a partner effort to come up with all the code we wrote. For the future, especially if we are not physically working on the project together the whole time, we could be brave and try creating pull requests and branches in GitHub.
